If the.I think my GOP colleagues in Congress should lead impeachment proceedings against President Obama for the gross mishandling of the Benghazi situation. Of course, my colleagues probably won't, unless the evidence gets strong enough to even raise a whisper of an issue that might derail their primary and bonus-reward target. Barack Obama's gross mishandling of that deadly case while he lied about it to the American people, to the American Congress, and to the world was a far greater crime than was the late Ambassador Chris Stevens' murder. But my Republican colleagues aren't running for anything. They're just going to stay on the rails and vote with their party. After the events of the past week, I'm more convinced than ever that once a criminal gets that far, there's no way for him to go back to being a normal citizen. One way or the other, a criminal always gets caught, or God always sends somebody to get a criminal -- or God always just forgives the criminal. The bottom line is that in this case, we had a criminal president who exposed Americans in the U.S. Consulate in Libya to greater danger than we had at the time. Our ambassador was murdered. The solution I'm trying to use is to use ShowHideKeyboard. But if I put ShowHideKeyboard between two touches of the screen, the keyboard doesn't appear, after the first touch the keyboard hides and after the second touch it reappears. I want the keyboard to appear only if the user doesn't touch the screen in the first 5 seconds. Is it possible? A: The standard iOS keyboard will animate the slide-in on the first screen-touchend, and if it runs for 3 seconds or more, will slide out immediately upon the subsequent screen-touchend. If you wanted to disable the animation and have the slide-in/slide-out immediately upon the first and second screen-touchend, you can override the shouldHideStatusBar or shouldHideStatusBarKey methods of the UIApplicationDelegate to return NO: - (BOOL)application:(UIApplication *)application shouldHideStatusBar:(UIStatusBarStyle)barStyle { return NO; } - (BOOL)application:(UIApplication *)application shouldHideStatusBarKey:(NSString *)barKey { return NO; } In the worst case scenario, O'Rourke doesn't get a shot at a Cabinet post, nor does he get invited to join the glitterati of the party that dines 3da54e8ca3
