a' }]. ... } Finally, delete the data.composer data/cache data.sites data.settings data.themes data.users with the following, and then follow the steps described in #2 at the top of this document. rm -rfdata . rm -rfdata composer rm -rfdata cache rm -rfdata sites rm -rfdata settings rm -rfdata themes rm -rfdata users I believe the real cause of the problem is that the path: data.stamp_settings in config.php was not the case as stated in the OP's question. Since: The application uses a module that makes use of a module from another application (Magento). It's hard to hardcode paths, and one of the core problems is that Magento, and other extensions often do not include this information in their core. So the fix for this issue is to use a real-world test to see if your path is correct. When I downloaded Magento and performed this test: wget I had one result. So when I moved the relevant code to the question, I received no results, but just in case this is the case (just forget the URL) let's try again: wget At this point I had not so much luck. So I made a shortcut on the desktop and did what I did for the real test: curl -O When I ran that on the desktop, I got a download. So I move that file (MagentoMobile_CE-1.8.0.0.zip) to the path where the OP was running the test, then I copied over the dir to my desktop (that's what I did for the question). I ran the test again, and bff6bb2d33
