WASHINGTON □ An American Navy surveillance satellite orbiting Earth for years intercepted messages sent by Iran's president, Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, and his chief strategist, during a period of confusion about whether the country would open its nuclear program to international inspectors, according to United States officials briefed on intelligence reports. The intercepts are part of a broader pattern of Iranian disclosures of coded messages sent by the country's leadership that have focused attention on a degree of sophistication in its nuclear activities that has long eluded the
